INTER-ISLAND
CONTROLS WILDER

STOCKHOLDERS OF FORMER COM-PANY SECURE CONTROLLING
INTEREST OF RIVAL CONCERN.

C. M. Cooke, George N. Wilcox, A. S. Wilcox, J. A. Kennedy, J. M. Dowsett and August Dreier yesterday purchased 2514 shares of Wilder S. S. Co. stock from the estate of S. G. Wilder for $150 a share a heavy advance on the prevailing price of $122.50 a share that ruled yesterday on the Stock Exchange. The deal was of particular significance for it means that the Wilder Company is now controlled by stockholders of the Inter-Island Steam Navigation Company and while no plans have as yet been announced for any immediate consolidation of the two companies the general opinion seems to be that the deal will result in an effective amalgamation of the two companies under one management.

The Wilder S. S. Company stock consists of 5,000 shares and at the price paid yesterday the valuation is $750,000. The cash transaction yesterday was $375,100. About $100,000 additional of the Wilder stock had been held by two of the purchasers so that the Inter-Island purchasers now control about $475,000 of the Wilder stock the actual number of shares purchased yesterday being more than a controlling interest in addition to the block previously held.

The directors of the Wilder Company are C. L. Wight president and general manager; W. M. Giffard vice president; E. B. Rose secretary and treasurer; W. Pfotenhauser, auditor; E. D. Tenney, George C. Beckley and E. Faxon Bishop.

The Wilder fleet consists of the following steamers: Kinan, Claudine, Helene, Maui, Kalulu, Likelike and Lehua and the Inter-Island of the following steamers: Mauna Loa, W. G. Hall, Nihau, Mikahala, Noeua, Keauhou, James Makee, Kauai, Iwaleani, Hanalei (now in San Francisco for sale) Waialeale and gasoline schooner Malolo.

GEORGE (KID) BELL.

Referred To The Federation Of Labor

the outsiders would have to withdraw. As Pinkham with the other outsiders reached the door he was requested by President Callahan to stay as the members of the Council wished to ask him some questions. For a few seconds he hesitated.

"Are you going to submit to a cross examination by a whole room full of men?" he was asked.

"I don't think I will," he replied but nevertheless he went into the room again and was there for over an hour.

After his final withdrawal there was a hot discussion and finally on the motion of President Callahan himself the committee of the Council appointed to form a part of the Pinkham commission was ordered discharged and the report was ordered submitted to Washington for the consideration of the American Federation of Labor.

The matter will not be taken up by the labor bodies again until the next meeting in two weeks.

Pinkham's address to the Trades and Labor Council was in many respects a remarkable effort. It commenced with an explanation of how the commission came to be formed at the request of Governor Carter to "privately investigate" the labor and industrial situation in Hawaii. The explanation of this privacy was thus explained:

"We were not in any strict sense an official committee. We were not paid nor were our large expenses paid from public funds. We traveled and conducted ourselves as a party of private gentlemen and were entertained as private gentlemen. We never called ourselves a commission. We had no right to send for persons or papers. We had no right to subpoena persons or administer oaths. We had no right to examine or cross-examine persons. We had not one particle of the authority necessary to secure evidence, sworn statements or even good order in public gatherings.

"To have held public sessions without such powers of oath and inquiry would have been absurd, futile and of no avail and led simply to polemic discussions.

The result of the commissions' work, Pinkham claimed, was an absolutely truthful and reliable statement of the facts and experience and opinions of, save three or four plantations, every agricultural enterprise on the Hawaiian Islands, including sugar, rice, coffee, bananas, pineapples, sisal, castor beans and minor items. In fact he said, as never before, all had disclosed of their own volition the actual facts of their experience, hopes, successes and failures.

After quoting the language of the report in regard to small farming Pinkham dealt with the situation as created by the preponderance of Japanese labor and made the unqualified avowal that in his opinion the only way to combat the growing influence of the Japanese was by the importation of Chinese labor.

"We cannot but regard the international relations between the United States and Japan, and our language should be such, the administration will not be embarrassed," ran the address of Pinkham.

"This report deals with a deeper question than the special grievances some of you have or which may affect the special trade or trades that you state have been infringed upon.

This report will have an influence on the policy of the United States toward its tropical possessions.

"The discussions on the platform, in legislative halls and in the press, relative to the principle, rights and conditions in outlying possessions, have proceeded on the assumption the factors of necessary means of existence in a tropical country were similar to those of the temperate zone mainland.

"It has been assumed that in the Hawaiian Islands there is an equal variety of employments corresponding to those of the mainland, so that if commercial or legislative disturbance affects one or more industries, the others will be in a normal state and that displaced labor can easily adjust itself by a change of employment.

"This is a most fallacious premise to be applied either in argument or fact to the Hawaiian Islands.

"It is wrong, gentlemen, for you to entertain such representations.

"Few, if any, of you have visited every portion of these islands, hence, from personal observation, you are unable to judge.

"It was for this very purpose you were invited to send your representatives on this committee. This committee has proven to you that the Hawaiian Islands have no minerals, no forests, no fuel on which to base manufactures, no fibres on which to base textile manufactures. If we had, isolated as we are, we could not compete in the markets of the world.

"The misleading part of all this public discussion is that because experimentally we can raise some products, in almost every instance no complete commercial estimates based on past and present facts as to the products are given. Without these there can be no sound progress.

"It is as unwise, fool-hardy, and disastrous as to send a perfectly equipped ship into mid-ocean without a compass.

"You have at present but one ship—sugar—and everyone knows it.

"Let the crew mutiny or disagree, throw overboard the sextant and compass, and it is a question if the ship does not wreck itself and the whole passenger list suffer and perish."

But the sting of the Pinkham address was in its tail and by deft manipulation the author of the report passed the responsibility of suggesting the importation of Chinese labor back to the Trades and Labor Council itself.

"At our meeting in July," said Pinkham, "our committee discussed the question of Japanese aggression and preponderance. I listened to your remarks and finally put this question."

"In view of our distant and isolated position as relates to Europe and the immediate demands of the situation, what nationality can be secured to meet this exigency and offset, promptly and without disaster, the preponderance of the Japanese?"

"One of your most intelligent and well-informed members replied:

"The Chinese."

"From that moment until I read the report for the approval of your committee, I intentionally refrained from mentioning the Chinese, and in no instance can anyone truthfully recall any utterance of mine naming the Chinese."

"Gentlemen, I too had some hopes of an indigenous population. I hope so now, but the practicality of the possibility to my mind far too distant to meet the present situation now or in the near future.

"Time must be given or we are liable to wreck the whole commercial, political and social fabric.

"Through the efforts of the governor in part, and I am not immodest when I say through strenuous efforts on my own part, labor has an opportunity never before presented in the history of the world and that is to join equal with capital in a specific understanding to together solve the labor and, incidentally, the political and social conditions pertaining to the Hawaiian Islands. You have not only equal opportunity but your associates are to furnish the funds for the experiment.

"If you reject what has been secured for you, your friends will feel they cannot depend on your co-operation but must struggle with these problems which will not down, single-handed.

"I trust no such monumental folly will prevail. This report will unquestionably be placed before John Hay, Secretary of State, Frank P. Sargent, Commissioner General of Immigration, Samuel Gompers, President Federation of Labor, J. K. Kahanamoku, Delegate to Congress, the Chinese Minister, Washington, the Japanese Minister, Washington.

"These men will judge your action on a broad basis. They are competent to protect the mainland from any incursion of alien labor.

"They are of sufficiently broad intelligence to appreciate the variation of conditions in our isolated, one-crop, little country.

"I thank you for your attention and now submit the issue to your determination or so far as the action of the Honolulu Trades and Labor Council affects the problem.
